Course Overview

The field of hematology has been rapidly evolving. This continuing medical education activity will discuss new developments in the diagnosis and treatment of malignant and non-malignant hematological disorders, as presented at the 2020 Annual Meeting of the American Society of Hematology (ASH). During this one-day course, faculty will share updates in myeloid malignancies, lymphoma, leukemia, multiple myeloma, coagulation disorders, and stem cell transplantation. Through presentations and Q&A sessions, attendees will gain a deeper understanding of emerging treatments available for hematological malignancies and blood disorders and learn how these new therapies can be integrated into daily practice.

Intended Audience

This conference is intended for primary care physicians, hematologists and medical oncologists, fellows, residents, CRNPs, PAs, nurses, and all other health care providers.

Objectives

- Provide an overview and highlight the cutting-edge data presented at the 2020 Annual Meeting of the American Society of Hematology (ASH)
- Identify updates in molecular abnormalities that can be utilized in the diagnosis, prognosis, risk stratification, and therapy selection for patients with myeloid malignancies

- Discuss and assess the relevant clinical trial data in clinical practice, which has the potential to improve outcomes in patients with malignant hematologic disorders including non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, CLL, and multiple myeloma
- Review the updates in sequencing strategies in the era of novel immunotherapies, CAR T-cell therapies, targeted therapies, and stem cell transplantation
- Discuss the latest advances in coagulation and platelet disorders
