Conference overview and intended audience

Glomerulonephritic disorders (GNs) are a spectrum of rare kidney diseases that can lead to increased morbidity and end stage kidney disease. There have been several new diagnostic tools as well as many new medications approved to help manage these patients. The goal of this symposium would be to discuss updates in management of GNs with emphasis on practical approach to patient care. Our intended audience is providers from any specialty who care for patients with kidney disease. Physicians, nurse practitioners, nurses, fellows, and residents are welcome.
